An Introduction to Pho

Pho (fuh) is a national Vietnamese dish eaten for breakfast, lunch, or dinner. It is served in a big bowl with white flat thin rice noodles in our beef broth, with thin cuts of beef (eye round, flank, brisket, etc.), chicken, or seafood. Although tempting, please do not dive into your bowl of pho immediately after it is placed in front of you. A little patience and preparation will greatly enhance your pho experience. Here are some tips collected from our patrons throughout the years.

Step One: Spice up your broth

Lift your spoon and sample the steamy broth. Be careful...it's hot. If the broth is a little bland, add a dash of fish sauce. Not too much though, you can add more later. Next, add a sprinkle of black pepper and squeeze an entire wedge of lime into your bowl. Add a little hoisin sauce for sweetness. For those who like it spicy, a couple squirts of sriracha hot sauce will do the trick.

Step Two: Add the vegetation (herbs and sprouts)

Add about a handful of bean sprouts to your pho. Use your chop-sticks to toss the noodles and the meat together. Make sure to submerge any pieces of rare beef that are still pink as well. Next, add a couple of leaves of Thai basil to your bowl after removing them from the stems. Add the culantro (saw herb), tear 2-3 of them into one inch long pieces and place them in the pho as well. Add the jalapeño slices if you enjoy your pho spicy.

Step Three: Prepare the dipping dish

Squeeze some hoisin sauce and sriracha chili into a small saucer. A 50/50 split is recommended, but uses less sriracha if you can't handle spicy foods. Mix the two sauces together using the tip of your chopsticks. Taste and perfect your creation. Use this sauce to dip the meats in before eating with your noodles.

Step Four: Time to slurp

Get ready to enjoy your pho! Pair pieces of beef with Thai basil, saw herb or a slice of serrano chili - dip into the hoisin sauce / sriracha chili mixture you made in Step Three. Don't forget to sip the broth in between bites of noodles and beef.

Remember all the above are just recommendations ...you can eat your pho any way you like! Enjoy!

Dine in and to go soups are boiling hot (212°F) Please be careful, it can be a burning hazard!

Please help us keep our prices down by not taking our soup spoons. We reuse them. No outside food is allowed. Thank you!
